Cancer Council WA¹ conducted an audit of online alcohol retailers (n=42) during January and July, 2022 and found:

29% held an interstate liquor licence	Age verification (ID check) was never required to purchase alcohol	Alcohol could be ordered for cheap, fast & late night deliveries to Perth	Alcohol orders for WA regions were still cheap, but deliveries take longer	Alcohol (19%) could be ordered using buy now, pay later

Deakin University² surveyed WA adults (n=499) during August to September 2022 who have purchased alcohol online for home delivery and found:

95% had seen online alcohol delivery ads in the past month, and just under half saw online alcohol ads daily	24% had alcohol delivered while intoxicated, 75% of who were never or only sometimes refused delivery	50% did not have their ID checked upon their last same day or rapid delivery 22% said their same-day or rapid delivery was usually left unattended at the door	Participants with high-risk drinking behaviours were significantly more likely to: Witness or receive targeted promotions, use online alcohol delivery more often, use rapid or same day services, order higher volumes of alcohol and order alcohol while intoxicated.

Deakin University³ also conducted a series of test purchases (n=34) for same day and rapid (<2 hrs) alcohol deliveries during October to November 2022 and found:

24% of alcohol orders were delivered without an ID check* <small>*Deliveries were received by young looking adults (aged under 25)</small>	One alcohol order was left unattended at the door without sighting the recipient or checking ID

So what's the problem?

Packaged liquor accounts for about 80% of alcohol sold in Australia, and increasingly, people are ordering alcohol online for delivery.

Current practices for online marketing and delivery of alcohol are putting people in the community at risk, especially our children, people with alcohol dependence, and people experiencing violence in the home.

Risks such as underage drinking and injuries from alcohol intoxication are likely to increase where age verification and checks for intoxication are absent, and where rapid, late-night, and unattended deliveries are allowed.

Whilst the recent growth in online sales may be attributed to COVID-19, this increase in online alcohol delivery use may be permanent. We need further sensible controls to help keep WA communities healthy and safe both now and as the online marketplace continues to evolve.
